Comments: We got off to a late start from camp because of laundry hassles. The truck to Truite lake was very long (eight to nine hours). The last two of which were on a very bad dirt road that lead the last 24 miles to Truite Lake. Once at the bottom of Truite we had to pay 10 dollars to pitch our tents on a sand pit. It may be a better idea to plan a early departure from camp when possible in order to get down the lake a bit. We, however, were not aware of any campsites on the south end of the lake.

The first real day of tripping is long, but is pretty straight-forward paddling. If departure from the bottom of Truite is made by 8:00, the tripping day should end at 5:00 without too much trouble. (this is of course depending on favorable winds)

The next tripping day is far too long and should be cut into two days. The portages from Kokomis to Quiblier are either nonexistent or very poorly cut. We started early, 7:15 from Vieillard and tripped until 6:00 pm to Quiblier. There is no way to make the original Lower Cowashoune destination.

Day four of our trip was used to bush from Petit Quiblier to Lower Cowashoune. The bush was very tough and should not be attempted unless absolutely necessary. We made it to the falls between the two Cowashoune lakes by lunch and took an hour to swim and rest before going on. There is a fairly good campsite at the falls and it would be good to plan a night there.

From the falls we tripped for another four hours, until 6:00, to Padoue. If we were coming from the falls in the morning we could have gotten to Litvine. This destination would be appropriate.

Our trip was then scheduled to go to Lac Dumoine the day we stayed on Padoue. We were behind but made it to Dumoine the following day, 8:30. From Litvine to the top of Lac Dumoine would be a good day and could be scheduled. The portages here are not good at all and they are hard to find. There looks like a nice portage around Crutch Brook that would be faster than dragging the brook. IT IS NOT FASTER and should not be used. The brook is almost all straight paddling except for the first fifty yards.

One day should be allotted to paddle down Lac Dumoine. If winds are bad, it could take all day. There is a very nice campsite on Brulart just to the left of the channel that continues to the river.

From there the river is very straightforward. We unfortunately were only given two full days on the river. We had to really move to make our final destination by the eighth night. A trip could easily spend three or four days on the river.
